 Six tabs

 Red = act now

 Yellow = soon

1. The Bell Screen

Tapping the bell on Home opens a single combined list of every date-based item in the app. Rather than a scrolling tab bar, six pill-shaped buttons sit in a tidy 3 × 2 grid so every period stays visible at once:

Today · Tomorrow · Next 7 Days · This Month · This Quarter · Missed

Comes from	What appears
Deposits	Maturity dates and Recurring Deposit instalments
Insurance	Premium due dates and policy maturities
Post Office	Instalment due dates and maturities
Mutual Funds	SIP instalment dates
Certificates	Items approaching or past expiry
Daily Log	Scheduled payment reminders, plus one cumulative “Daily Expenses Due” card when a reminder schedule has arrived and money is still owed

2. Why “Missed” Behaves Differently

The first five tabs are read-only previews. Missed is different, because the app can’t know whether you paid a bill outside the app.

- Self-resolving items never land in Missed. A Recurring Deposit’s next instalment and a SIP’s next instalment automatically roll forward to the next upcoming date, so there is nothing to dismiss.

- Unpaid premiums and instalments can be ticked off. Tick one or more, press Mark Done, and they are remembered as dismissed. Up to five Mark Done steps can be undone, one after another.
- Maturities, expiring certificates and Daily Log payments cannot be ticked here. They keep showing until you deal with the real record on its own screen (renew it, close it, mark it paid).
- A dismissal is tied to the item's date. If a record later changes — say a deposit is renewed with a new maturity date — it counts as a new item and appears again.
- A SIP simply finishing is informational and never appears at all.

3. The Bell's Own Verdict

Condition	Bell badge
Missed or Today has at least one item	 Red
Nothing there, but Tomorrow has an item	 Yellow
All three are empty	None

Design note

Home needs this answer without the Notifications screen being open. So the same checks are run in a lightweight form that only asks “is anything here?”. The two are kept deliberately identical so the bell and its list can never disagree.

4. Daily Expenses Due Reminder

From Daily Log's Due Payments popup you can set one reminder schedule for unpaid daily expenses. The schedule options are:

Frequency	What you pick
Weekly	A day of the week (Mon – Sun)
Monthly	A day of the month (1st – 31st; short months use their last day)
Quarterly	Which month of the quarter (1st, 2nd or 3rd) plus the day of month
Bi-Yearly	Which month of the half-year (1st – 6th) plus the day of month
Yearly	The actual month (Jan – Dec) plus the day of month

When the latest scheduled date has arrived and money is still owed, one cumulative “Daily Expenses Due · ₹ total” card appears. It cannot be swiped away or marked done from here — it disappears only when the expenses are actually paid in Daily Log.

5. The Red / Yellow Badge System

Colour	Meaning
 Red	Already due or matured and still unresolved — needs action now (for example a matured deposit still marked open, or an unpaid bill past its date)
 Yellow	Still upcoming, but falls due within about the next day — a heads-up
No dot	Everything in that area is fine

- Icons carry meaning too. An exclamation mark means money is due; a tick marks a date-based reminder or event, so the two stay distinguishable at a glance.
- The most severe wins as it rolls up. Deposit → bank → family member → whole family, a single red anywhere underneath makes everything above it red.
- Recurring Deposits are watched twice. Even if one is years from maturing, an instalment due tomorrow still raises a flag.
- Placement. Badges sit at the end of a row-style button, or float at the top-right corner of a square tile; if nothing needs attention, nothing is drawn.

Daily Log's own badge

A separate check reads Daily Log's saved expenses and reminders (including repeating bills) and each mutual fund SIP's next due date, and returns the worst result found. Red beats yellow beats nothing.
